67 (SPLIT C) We need to recommit ourselves to building a strong America. For sure, that means a strong military and commitment to battle terrorists. But it also means prioritizing our own country. Rather than a go-it-alone foreign policy that requires American taxpayers rebuilding Iraq alone, we should be devoting more resources to our own education, health care and retirement. Companies should not be rewarded when they relocate abroad or outsource jobs to India. We should reward companies that create jobs in America. My priority is an economy that all can depend upon. 69 (SPLIT D) My goal for America is pretty simple - to restore the idea that every citizen matters. After this period of corporate excesses, we need more loyalty to employees and commitment to country. Enriching the middle class should be just as important as enriching the top 1 percent. We need to return to an America of rising opportunity, when people learned responsibility and commitment to community and country. I believe in the old-fashion idea of citizenship when all share in America's prosperity and all share an obligation to do more for their country.29 20 16 18 16 1 49 66

70 (SPLIT C) We need to change the way they do business in Washington. They run up massive deficits, hurting our long-term economic well-being and passing the bills to our kids. They create a feeding trough for corporate special interests who turn Medicare reform into a giveaway for prescription drug companies and an energy security bill into a tax giveaway for oil companies. They support policies that encourage American companies to move or outsource the jobs overseas. 71 (SPLIT D) President Bush is pursuing a reckless and arrogant foreign policy that is creating more uncertainty, more costs and undermining our leadership. Our go it alone policy in Iraq means American taxpayers pay all the bills and American troops all the risks. His policies have divided NATO and have distracted us from pursuing terrorism elsewhere in the world. As a veteran of Vietnam, I will invest in our military and the men and women, work to rebuild our military alliances and show the kind of leadership that wins respect in the world.25 19 12 19 25 1 44 55

72 (SPLIT D) My overriding goal as president is a strong economy. For sure, we will have a strong defense and battle the terrorists. But we face long-term and major economic problems that the Bush administration does not get. They think it is okay with the very wealthiest and biggest corporations doing okay. But we've lost 3 million jobs, many to India and China, incomes are barely going up, health care costs are skyrocketing and employers are cutting back benefits and pensions. Deficits are out of control and Bush's only economic policy is permanent tax cuts for the wealthy. What we need is a new commitment to full employment and jobs in the U.S., lowering health care costs, middle class tax cuts, and new investments in education and technology. Let's move our economy in a new direction.34 14 14 17 20 1 48 62

74 (SPLIT E) I believe Americans face a very clear choice in this election. It's a choice between keeping the tax relief that is moving the economy forward or putting the burden of higher taxes back on the American people. 76 We came to office with an economy already headed into recession and the dot-com bubble about to burst, then our weakened economy was hurt further by the attacks of 9/11. We responded to these historic challenges by delivering historic tax relief, and the consumer spending and investment that resulted helped lift our economy back to growth, so that people are getting hired again. With interest rates still low, home ownership at a record high, and workers keeping more of what they earn, we have made this economy the fastest growing of any major industrialized nation.	26	19	11	22	21	1	44	55

Q.79 Now, I am going to read a pair of statements by President Bush and John Kerry about their views of the country and the election. For whom would you vote if you heard the following statements from John Kerry and George Bush?

John Kerry says, we need to move in a new direction - to renew our economy and our country. President Bush says the economy is great, but that's true only for a wealthy few. Deficits are exploding, while jobs are scarce and being exported overseas. Middle class incomes are stuck, while health care costs are skyrocketing. And now President Bush wants permanent tax cuts for the wealthiest and tax loopholes that encourage corporations to relocate abroad. But I want to create opportunity and build a strong America. I favor middle class tax cuts, tough enforcement of our trade laws, rewarding companies that create jobs in the U.S., investment in education and training, and limiting rises in health care costs. It is time to make the right choices for our country.

WHILE George Bush says, I hope we have restored honor and dignity to the White House and provided steady, strong leadership through very challenging times. I believe faith and personal responsibility built our country and are the key to what we want for our children. We continue to move forward in protecting our people from the threat of terrorism and rebuilding our economy. Regrettably, Senator Kerry takes both sides of so many issues, though he has a clear record of cutting intelligence and defense, and raising taxes, including on gasoline. My vision is different, to give every American more control of their own money, their health care coverage, and their retirement savings, because I believe the individual, not the government, is the answer.

Based on these statements from Kerry and Bush on their vision, for whom would you vote?
