Q.53 As you know, George W. Bush presented his plan for the economy and tax cuts last week.

His plan would completely eliminate taxes on stock dividends, accelerate tax rate cuts scheduled for 2004 and 2006, and provide further tax breaks to some businesses and individuals. Bush's plan would also increase the child tax credit from six hundred dollars to one thousand dollars, provide relief from the marriage penalty, and extend unemployment benefits. The Bush plan would cost six hundred seventy billion dollars over the next ten years.

Q.54 Democrats in Congress also presented a plan for the economy and tax cuts last week.

The Democrats' plan would provide an immediate tax rebate of three hundred dollars for each individual taxpayer or six hundred dollars for each couple and give tax relief to businesses that invest in new equipment that creates jobs. The Democratic plan would also provide thirty one billion dollars in aid to the states to help them pay for increased healthcare and homeland security costs and avoid further layoffs. The plan extends unemployment benefits. The Democrats' plan would cost two hundred thirty six billion dollars over ten years, but half is spent this year.
