Q.56 I am going to read you a statement by a Republican candidate for Congress. Regardless of how you intend to vote, I want you to tell me whether it makes you more or less likely to support the candidate.

The Republican candidate says we must support President Bush in his efforts to protect our country, give our military the resources and technology it needs, and win the war on terrorism. But we can't ignore our economy and needs here at home. I believe individuals, not government, should choose how their money is spent, but Democrats have opposed our efforts to cut taxes and reduce government spending, and now they want to raise taxes again. Democrats in the Senate have blocked President Bush's homeland security plan, patients' bill of rights, and prescription drug benefit. The Republican candidate says we need to put our country's interests ahead of partisan politics. We need to support President Bush's efforts to expand the tax cuts passed last year and make them permanent, increase accountability in our schools, and provide prescription drug coverage for seniors who need it most.

The Democratic candidate says: Washington should be more responsive to people, and less to big corporate interests. Budget surpluses are now deficits and the economy is weakening. In response, the Republican Congress voted billions in retroactive tax cuts for Enron and the biggest corporations. Corporate abuses are hurting investors, pensions and the economy. The cost of environmental clean-ups is being transferred from industry to taxpayers. And they are now borrowing from the Social Security trust for other purposes and proposing to link future benefits to the stock market. The Democratic candidate has different priorities. He says we should be acting to protect employee pensions and bar the government from borrowing the Social Security trust fund. We must finally address the rising cost of prescription drugs. And we should cut taxes for the middle class, starting with making college tuition tax deductible.
